Ethics involves contemplating what is right and wrong, especially when we are uncertain or disagree about the correct course of action. In such cases, we engage in ethical dilemmas. Here are four examples:

1. Is it right for me to report to the teacher if I suspect a classmate has stolen a mobile phone from another student at school? What if I am mistaken?
2. How should we assemble the soccer team for the next match – should we only use the best players, or should everyone get a chance to play?
3. How many refugees from global conflict zones should Norwegian authorities agree to accept each year – more or fewer than today?
4. Is it justifiable to eradicate wolves in Norway to protect livestock that graze in the fields?
